THE BRITISH NAVY.

Another Increase to Duplicate Russian Action.

George J. Goschen, First Lord of the Admiralty, made his statement on the supplementary naval program on July 22 in the House of Commons. He reviewed the original program, which was considered sufficient when it was framed, being based upon the two power system — that the navy of Great Britain must be equal to the combined fleets of any two powers. But in consequence of the action of Russia the Government was compelled to present a supplemental program, paralleling the Russian increase of six battleships which Russia proposed to begin in 1898. Only two battleships were taken in account in the original British program, and the First Lord of the Admiralty announced that he now asked the House to grant four more battleships.

Continuing, Mr. Goschen said: "The Russian program provides for four cruisers. We propose to build four, and also twelve destroyers. It is estimated that the cost of the new program will be $8,000,000, making the entire expenditure for the new ships $15,000,000. The battleships will be especially adapted for the passage of the Suez canal."

Mr. Goschen pointed out that her Majesty's Government desired Europe to note that the proposal was not aggressive, but essential to maintain the principle laid down. Nor was Russia's action a menace to Great Britain. She had the right to build such a fleet as she thought her position required.

The Moscow correspondent of the Standard says: It seems that Russia has dropped the idea of spending 90,000,000 roubles on her navy. The motive for the change is unknown, but it is supposed to indicate that the party favoring an Anglo-American, instead of a Russo-German entente is gaining strength.

Have a Smile?

"Todd, your wife has a voice like velvet." "Gracious! Don't talk so loud. If she heard that I should have to get her a new dress to match it."

Visitor—"Pat says he's descended from some of the greatest houses in Ireland." Mike—"Musha! So he did, many a toime—on a ladder!"

"An exchange reports," says Electricity, "that in an examination that was made of some 'electric belts' sold by a street fakir, it was found that beneath a strip of gauze was a layer of dry mustard. When the wearer perspired a little the mustard was moistened and set up a burning sensation, and the deluded victim believed a current of electricity was passing through him."

Wife (angrily)—"Yes, I gave you a pattern button, and asked you to get me a dozen to match it. It was the only one I had, and you go and lose it. I never knew such carelessness, and can't think what would become of the house if I were as careless as you are. Where did you put that button, I should like to know?" Husband (meekly)—"No doubt I put it in the pocket with a hole in it, which I have been asking you to mend for the last three weeks."

She—"Did you see that bird of Paradise on Mrs. Styles' hat, at the theater last night?" He—"That wasn't what the fellow who sat behind her called it."

The Kenilworth.

Before the San Francisco papers arrived with their suspicion that foul play was at the bottom of the fire in the Kenilworth and the deaths of Captain Baker, mate Piper and the boy Hobson, the same theory was expressed to a BULLETIN reporter by James Lyle, superintendent of the marine railway. He said the Kenilworth had a nasty crew, that made trouble while the ship was in Hawaiian waters. Mr. Lyle knew Captain Baker well. He describes him as "a splendid man and one of the finest captains sailing American ships." How a sugar cargo in an iron ship should take fire without malicious agency is a mystery to Mr. Lyle, who has had to do with ships afloat and on shore all his life.
